4. SCOPE OF WORK

1. Corporate Services sanctioned a project on engagement of employees and survey on organisational culture in 2021. A number of recommendations were made regarding the ineffective communication within SCM and overall poor communication within UW; dissatisfaction regarding remuneration; lack of provision of ICT equipment and lack of team work amongst others. This survey was more desktop oriented and therefore did not allow collection of data through interviews or any other methodology which would have supplemented the questionnaires. Equally, there was no broader diagnosis of the organisational culture and parameters that were used to measure it. It is the purpose of this project therefore to close the gaps that are identified and provide comprehensive view which might complement the recently released Organisational Design Report and assist in being adaptive to the proposed structural changes.

Change in any organisation is likely to undermine employees' freedoms which will arouse negative affective states. The latter are likely to energise reactance – a motivational state directed to restore threatened freedoms. Negative affect and reactance may be mitigated by implementing and sustaining socially supportive and interpersonally just organisational environment, led by an emotionally intelligent management staff. A positive work environment is crucial to the success of business. It helps motivate employees as well as improving their job satisfaction, creativity and productivity for the organisation. In order to create a healthy workplace, there is a need to plan an environment in which employees feel safe to work and also feel welcome to share their ideas. This will become the drive of the organisation's constant growth and development. There is a long term objective of creating a career-conducive organisation which is not only important strategic human resources and development contribution but also an important quality-of-life contribution and an ethical duty. It is also important to invest on digital literacy and ensuring supply of devices and equipment to those who are already technological advanced.

One of the issues that cause serious stress at work and also lead to good employees' resignation is harassment in the workplace. Harassment can be in many forms, from verbal to physical actions. Sometimes the violator is not aware that their action is considered harassment. Also, they are not aware that their victims feel extremely uncomfortable by their actions or their words.

It is based on the recommendations of the OD Project and the review of the survey that was conducted in 2021 that UW will be able to address the current and desired organisational culture. It will be able to satisfy strategic objective 11 (SO11) which puts emphasis on improving the work culture. The project will allow employees; managers; senior managers and executive of UW to effect and embrace change.

2. The review of the engagement and survey on organisational culture must be able to gauge opinions around the following key issues:
 - Communication within the organisation;
 - Communication within SCM;
 - Provision of ICT equipment in line with migration to digital or paperless environment and state of readiness; and
 - Employees and management readiness to embrace change;

3. Methodological aspects

- The tenderer must be able to design the tailor made questionnaires based on strategic objective 11 of UW (improving organisational culture) and review the previous survey that was conducted in 2021. Interviews can also be used to complement this methodological tool if deemed necessary.
- It is also expected that the tenderer be able to test the reliability and the validity of the questionnaires based on categories of trust; work-life balance; leadership; management style; retention; values; work environment; teamwork; training; career opportunities; communication; and change management.
- Insightful and comprehensive report based on survey results that answers the “so, what now” question needs to be submitted which will provide strategic insights to organisational challenges, summarizing key strengths; opportunities for improvement; and recommended actions to be taken in the short, medium and long term.
- It is therefore required that advanced technology be utilized for capturing survey data and applied statistical techniques for testing the integrity of the data.
- This exercise should also propose Action Plan component that provides strategic insights; recommendations and action planning for selected focus area and how to monitor progress of the actions over time.
- It is also expected that the main survey findings be presented to Senior Management where strategic insights and actions can be discussed and planned.

4. Critical success factors and the key benefits expected;

- An improved work culture;
- Improved employee satisfaction;
- Improved communication and more specifically communication within SCM;
- Improved confidence and trust on management;
- Escalation and resolving salary discrepancies;
- Improved team work; and
- Easy adaptation to new changes,
